ARABICA WINE

Our coffee journey begins with the careful selection of freshly picked coffee cherries, choosing only the perfectly ripe fruits. These cherries undergo a meticulous month-long fermentation process, followed by thorough drying and subsequent processing steps before reaching the final roasting stage.

ARABICA WASH (DRY HULLING)

Washed processing is a method known for its high degree of control and predictability, especially when compared to other processing techniques like natural processing. This consistency holds significant importance for specialty coffee producers who strive to maintain a consistent flavor profile from one batch to another.

ARABICA WASH (WET HULLING)

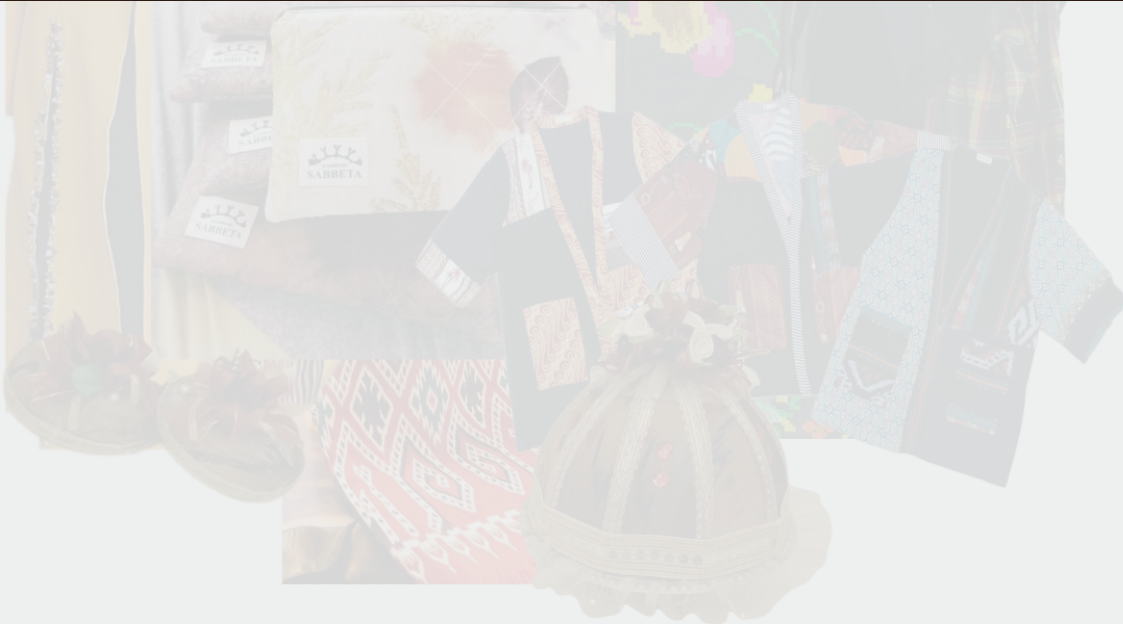

The full wash (wet hulling) process begins by peeling fresh and red coffee cherries and meticulously washing them until all mucilage is removed. Then, the cherries are further peeled until they transform into green beans, retaining some moisture. Subsequently, they are sun-dried until they reach the specified moisture content before advancing to the roasting stage.

WASH ARABICA GREEN BEANS (DRY HULLING & WET HULLING)

In the full wash coffee processing method, ripe red coffee cherries are meticulously peeled to remove their outer skin. Subsequently, the beans, still coated in mucilage, undergo an extensive washing process until all traces of mucilage are completely removed.

COCONUT INTERNASIONAL

Bank Indonesia Representative Office of South Sulawesi Province

Coconut International Indonesia was established on April 30th, 2014, specializing in the sale of agricultural products, particularly coconut shells sourced from local coconut farmers. These coconut shells are then processed into solid charcoal briquettes, available in stick, cube, and hexagonal models. As time passed, the availability of raw materials remained abundant in our region, presenting a significant opportunity to develop a coconut-based industry that benefits the local community. Initially, our production capacity was limited to 1 ton per day, with a workforce of 15 employees. However, today, we have expanded our operations and can produce up to 10 tons of briquettes daily, thanks to the dedication of our team of 100 workers.
